All Fours, one of Mark Morris' newest and most striking works, explores the charged, often-fleeting encounters that shape human relationships. Set to Bartók's tumultuous String Quartet No. 4, All Fours echoes and intensifies the music's fervor—each of its five movements illuminated by the choreographer's exceptional skill at constructing a dance both visually and rhythmically. In this, as in all of Morris' work, it's the music—performed live—that drives the dancing.

Morris, whom The San Francisco Examiner praised in stating, "There is no more musical, inventive, volatile or entertaining dancemaker currently afoot..." is currently at work on the program's second half, a world premiere.

"... a profoundly moving major work. Here is an American dance maker working at the top of his form."
