

DANCING

Mark Morris Goes Abroad

THE good news about Mark Morris is that his latest piece of choreography is the best thing he has ever done. The bad news is that he has done it in Brussels, the city that he and his company now call home. There is nothing at all the matter with Brussels; from Morris's point of view, it is just about perfect. But for Americans who wish to follow his work or who have a serious interest in the future of American dance—it comes to the same thing—Brussels is a long commute. Previously, the farthest I'd had to go for a Morris première was Seattle, which was his home base until the Brussels invitation came along. This time last year, I was sitting in the Seattle Opera House watching the dances that Morris had made for a local production of Gluck's "Orpheus" and wishing that Morris had been the director as well as the choreographer.

In Brussels, Morris has options no American city could offer him. He has the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie, one of the finest of all European opera houses, in which to present his work; he has generous amounts of rehearsal time and handsome, well-designed rehearsal facilities; and he has a budget that not only guarantees his dancers a living but also lets him hire the extra dancers and musical forces necessary for the production of, for example, his new wonderwork, "L'Allegro, il Penseroso ed il Moderato," which is based on Handel's oratorio of that name. This munificence is compelled from Brussels taxpayers at rates unthinkable to Americans. It was the populace of Brussels that, inflamed by a performance of "La Muette de Portici" in 1830, rushed out of the theatre and tried to overthrow the government. What some of us find even harder to believe is that the populace of Brussels has never rushed from Parliament to overthrow anything on the stage. Just before Christmas, I spent a few nights in Brussels watching the Morris company, now called the Monnaie Dance Group/Mark Morris, perform the two different programs with which it had made its Brussels début, in November—"L'Allegro" and a mixed bill of older works. The audiences seemed impressed—thrilled, even—with everything they saw. "L'Allegro," a full-evening work, is a good introduction to Morris's art. It is both sombre and playful, sacred and profane. It shows his musicianship and his theatre sense. It has grace, delicacy, and sweetness of expression, along with other things characteristic of its creator—ungainliness, unruliness, and love of risk. Morris is as capable of the celestial virtues in art as of the down-and-dirty ones, and he withholds nothing of himself in "L'Allegro." The piece pours forth treasures. As it draws to an end, its abundance flows to a level just short of excess, and you're happy about that. Then it overflows, and you're even happier.

Milton's "L'Allegro" and "Il Penseroso," which were published together in 1645, are full of pictures; that may be why they are among the first of Milton's works to be taught to schoolchildren. A century later, Handel set his music to an arrangement that alternated sections from the two poems. It was the idea of the librettist Charles Jennens (later the librettist of "Messiah") that the sanguine and melancholy temperaments should confront each other in a duel of opposites to be resolved by "Il Moderato," a conception of Jennens' intended to personify the eighteenth-century spirit of harmony and reconciliation. As things turned out, Handel paid less attention to Jennens' format than to Milton's imagery, and Morris, following Handel following Milton, has produced a stream of dances teeming with pictorial suggestion and achieving in the range of their humanity the resolution that Jennens sought to bring about by edict.

The longest and most complex of Morris's compositions, "L'Allegro" is also the most securely centered. Everything in it seems to spring from or be unified by a single idea, which, if one could name it, one might call whole-mindedness—the view that human nature balances itself, intertwines and harmonizes its antithetical strains with no need of legislation, either of the eighteenth century or of our own. More an appetite than an idea, this is what binds the imagery of Milton, Handel, and Morris in a semblance of continuous discourse. I can't recall another modern-dance work this side of Paul Taylor in which antecedents are as clearly marked and continuity is as strongly implied as in "L'Allegro." Perhaps because so many modern-dance choreographers have concerned themselves with breaking away from established practices, there isn't much precedent for what Morris

"Boom . . . boom . . . boom."

BAGGIER AND BETTER

ultrapima™ pinpoint oxford

Guaranteed to outlast all others in the heat of business battle, our 100% ultrapima™ cotton pinpoint buttondown combines an exceptionally fine weave, supersmooth finish and our cool, generous fit to create the ultimate in four season comfort. Always in style, the authentic 3/4" collar and its distinctive full roll, six button front, single needle side seams, long sleeves and tail are unmistakable, as are its truly long-wearing qualities.

$48. Two or more—$45. ea.

Available in crisp white—sizes 14½-17½, 32-36.

Add $3.50 shipping/handling/insurance

chk/mo mc/visa amex
card # _____ exp. date _____

For immediate delivery, call (617) 523-0317
239 Causeway #A201, Boston, MA 02114

© MERCER & SONS 1987

GRAND BANKS DORY

NEW! Apprentice-Success Series Kit

You'll glow with pride at the finished model of mid-1800 New England Grand Banks Dory. Over 15' long; over 1 ft. tall! New Midwest Products kit features basswood hull, sailcloth, rigging, oars, metal trawl rig, clear step-by-step plans. Only $29.95 (NYS residents please add sales tax). Also send for free 100-page color catalog of nautical gifts.

PRESTON'S

175-P Main St. Wharf, Greenport, N.Y. 11944

Custom Ebony Canes
FOR MEN & WOMEN
GOLD AND SILVER HEADS

CLASSICS LTD.

P.O. BOX 226656 • DALLAS, TX 75222 • 214-526-3769

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION Call between 9-10 am MON-FRI

has done here. When he makes overt reference to another choreographer, it's to Taylor—the Taylor of “Aureole,” which was also set to music by Handel. But Taylor is no more active a presence in “L’Allegro” than Denishawn is in Taylor’s work. For Morris, Taylor is there, and so is the Balanchine of “The Four Temperaments,” as a matter of philosophical inheritance.

“L’Allegro” is a dance spectacle in two acts. It has elements of pageantry and mime, but its dance impulse is steadily and inexhaustibly compelling. You see boys and girls responding to the beat, leaping, holding themselves in the air, becoming stags or birds, and rushing on. At different times, you see fleeting allegorical figures—Attic Grace, Melancholia—and lively, real little persons: shepherds, knights and ladies, the cricket on the hearth. No attempt is made at an official narrative; it's easy enough to spin one's own out of the welter of rhythms and emerging shapes. But it takes more than two performances, which were all I was able to see in Brussels, to grasp everything that Morris has put before us.

The Brooklyn Academy may present the work next year. In Morris's concert there last spring, there were indications that he had begun to move away from the structural confines of his musical settings into the realm of pure metaphor. “L’Allegro” confirms that direction. The second program shown at the Monnaie ended with a resplendent performance of “Gloria,” another work with a High Baroque choral setting and one of Morris's most affecting. But it is light-years away from “L’Allegro.” In “Gloria” we have a Morris who already sees himself as part of a tradition. His horizons, though, seem limited to what could have been expected of or permitted to a modern-dance choreographer in the eighties. In “L’Allegro” he seems to see himself as part of the world of art, and is brilliantly justified in doing so. The stance is taken in all humility and with appropriate art-on-art invocations. Blake on Milton and Poussin on Milton play a part in Morris's visualizations, with Blake's the prevailing and acknowledged influence. (The Monnaie's poster for the première of “L’Allegro” was a reproduction of Blake's “Milton's Dream”; the souvenir program included a small Blake portfolio.)

But Morris's triumph is to have transcended the sum of his sources. He has been helped by a wonderful company; both recruits and veterans dance with headlong lyricism. He has been helped not nearly enough by his designer, Adrienne Lobel, whose rising and falling scrimms and solid-color drops fill the stage with predetermined indeterminate postmodernist Attitude. In only one sequence, “Populous cities,” where the pastoral mood is broken, was this décor effective. The flowing chiffon costumes, by Christine Van Loon, are also neutral, but not so insistent about it. The soloists in the oratorio were the sopranos Lorraine Hunt, Jeanne Ommerlé, and Jayne West; the tenor Frederick Urrey; and the baritone James Maddalena. Craig Smith conducted them and the Monnaie orchestra and chorus in a performance good enough to stand on its own.

This June, Boston will see a Morris “Dido and Aeneas,” and there will be a week at Jacob's Pillow this summer. But how, operating from Brussels, will Morris manage to continue being a vital force in American dance? His position just now is hard to gauge. In Brussels, he has taken over a theatre that for twenty-seven years was the headquarters of Maurice Béjart and his Ballet of the Twentieth Century. It remains to be seen whether an audience built up by Béjart will continue to be fascinated by Morris. While houses so far have been full and ovations as warm as any Morris might receive in New York, there have also been a few boos, which could plausibly be laid to disgruntled Béjart partisans or to representatives of the Brussels dance establishment resentful of the American interloper. In April, Morris will present Brussels with his tripartite evening “Mythologies,” two-thirds of which —“Striptease” and “Championship Wrestling”—is among the most risk-taking, noncelestial work he has ever produced. It is safe to say that nothing he might put on could draw a clearer distinction between his sensibility, particularly his way of using trash, and Béjart's. (Actually, Béjart—who has relocated to Lausanne—doesn't use trash, he embodies it.)

If Brussels accepts Morris, it could be that his future will align itself more with European than with American dance, but this wouldn't necessarily include a small Blake portfolio.)

How To Get No Kick From Champagne.

Meier's all-natural sparkling juices contain no alcohol and no added sugar. Choose from nine crisp, bubbly flavors and give any occasion a natural sparkle.

MEIERS

To Order Call 800-346-2942
The John C. Meier Co., Silverton, Ohio 45236

BERMUDA LANDFALL

Like the elegant Longtail, our guests return again and again to the perfect spot on Bermuda's South Shore. Perhaps it's because at the Stonington Beach Hotel we offer impeccable service at a remarkably affordable price...and that all 64 rooms have ocean views from private terraces...our popular gourmet restaurant...or the nearness of golf and shopping. Just one perfect reason after the other.

STONINGTON
BEACH HOTEL Paget, Bermuda

See your travel agent or call:
RSI (1-800) 223-1588 in NY State (212) 661-4540
Owned and Operated by the Bermuda College

Quiet Elegance
in London's
Most Fashionable
Setting

The Chesterfield
Hotel Deluxe

35 Charles Street, Mayfair
(just off Berkeley Square)
London W1X 8LX, England
Telephone: 01-491 2622 212-245-9389
Telex: 269394 Fax: 01-491 4793
A Tollman-Hundley Hotel

mean that we'd lose him. European expressionism, which has already made inroads into American dance, could very well be affected, in turn, by him. But even if Morris is forced into splendid isolation chances are that he will go right on being the major figure he is now. He is seeing out the eighties as he began them—as his generation's one and only. He's known the isolation of being gifted. Geography adds nothing to that.

WHO says stars are a dying breed? From the Monnaie I went to Covent Garden, where Sylvie Guillem, première étoile of the Paris Opera, was appearing with the Royal Ballet and giving London a dose of ballerina chic, Continental style. For her star turn, "Grand Pas Classique," she wore a beautifully fitted tutu, the bodice and skirt covered in what looked to be five thousand dollars' worth of black lace. The upper half of the costume was black net, with long sleeves and a turtle-neck. Guillem's bright-henna hair was cut short and combed down in points all around her face. The whole effect was like a cross between a ballerina and an apache dancer. "Grand Pas Classique," choreographed in 1949 by Victor Gsovsky, is the tricky pas de deux Cynthia Gregory used to dance here in the seventies. In one notorious performance, Gregory smoked a cigarette during her variation, whether to dramatize her contempt for such claptrap or her ease in overcoming a technical challenge I cannot say. All that was missing from Guillem's performance was the Gauloise dangling from her lip. Guillem is that sturdy Paris stereotype the gamine as ballerina. But her manner isn't as brassily arrogant as her look leads you to expect. At key points—during a preparation or at the climax of a prolonged piqué balance—she would cue the audience with a smile or a glance, and each time the audience would be ravished by the dear little thing.

With her large peanut-shaped head and long, curvy legs, Guillem is physically all of a piece; one imagines a smart choreographer building on that and making her into the kind of theatrical icon that Roland Petit made of Zizi Jeanmaire. But so far it hasn't happened. Like many striking young ballet dancers today, Guillem is unconceived. Jonathan Cope, the rising young Royal soloist who was her part-

BREATHE AIR
FREE OF SMOKE
POLLEN
POLLUTION

Powerful EnerAire® Ionizer continuously purifies up to 4,000 cubic feet (a large room) of polluted air and makes it breathable and invigorating. Restores natural ion balance to unhealthy environments caused by industrial pollution, automobile exhaust, central air conditioning and heating, smoke, dust, pollen, animal fur... removes microscopic pollution particles not removed by any other method of air purification.

EnerAire was rated Number One for removal of cigarette smoke by the leading consumer protection magazine. EnerAire works the way nature cleans the air during a thunderstorm. Like lightning, it produces a concentration of negative ions which attach themselves to pollution particles in the air causing both to fall harmlessly to the floor. It has no noisy fan, costly filter, and requires no maintenance.

EnerAire produces 450,000 or more negative ions/cc./sec. (at one meter). Uses less than 2 watts. 9" high, 3" dia., 1 lb. Plugs into standard 110 volt outlet. Complete instructions included. Manufactured by Monadnock in the U.S.A. Immediate shipment.

30-DAY MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE... 12 MONTH MANUFACTURER'S WARRANTY

TO ORDER: Send $59.95 plus $3.50 each shipping and handling (in Mass. add 5% sales tax) by check, money order, MasterCard or Visa number and expiration date to MONADNOCK SALES COMPANY, Dept. 284, 201 Common St., P.O. Box 189, Dedham, MA 02026, or Call TOLL FREE (anytime) 1-800-334-0854, Extension 651. (for information, call 617-326-8675.) ASK FOR PRODUCT NUMBER 284. (201 Common St. is not a local retail location.)

The Grand Tour of Europe.

Magnificent hotels, Europe's most romantic cities and thirty-two hours aboard the King of Trains - 8 days for an incredible $2995.

Send $2 for a full-colour brochure.
Venice Simplon-Orient-Express,
1 World Trade Center, Suite 2565,
New York, NY 10048.

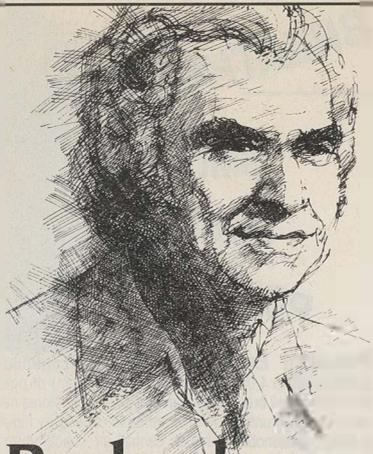

"A private estate that sweeps all honors as the most enchanting lakefront sanctuary of its kind in America."

THE HIDEAWAY REPORT

THE POINT Experience life as it's meant to be, at this former Rockefeller estate in the Adirondack mountains—private, romantic, and eminently civilized. Luxuriate in front of a crackling fire with breakfast in bed; stroll, ski, or snowshoe across the frozen lake and through hushed hemlock forests; curl up and settle in with a good book; dine elegantly by candlelight in the Great Hall with old friends and new. Discover The Point—endorsed by seven years of rave reviews, and one of only ten Relais & Chateaux in the U.S.

THE POINT, Saranac Lake, NY 12983
518-891-5678

Brubeck on Baldwin.

"Concert halls, night clubs, for recordings or at home... the Baldwin piano is my favorite instrument because it is consistently superior in quality.

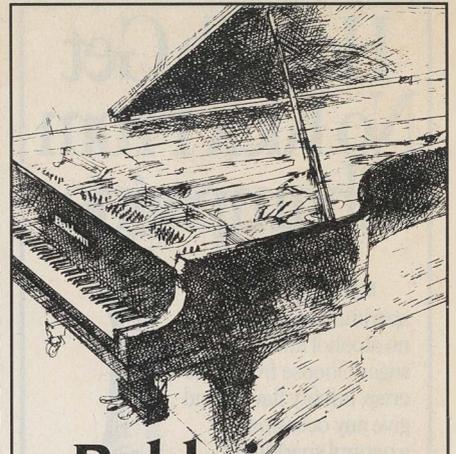

"And whether I'm performing at The White House or at a dinner honoring the Gorbachevs in Moscow, I prefer playing the Baldwin piano. With great pride."

Life plays better
on a  Baldwin

ner at Covent Garden, also has no focus as a classical dancer. His dancing is assorted specialties performed with no apparent relation to physical disposition or level of vitality. As Balanchine's Apollo, he gave a ponderous, self-conscious performance as painful in its way as Guillem's knowing, glib Terpsichore. The ballet has just been restored to the Royal repertory, and though the staging this time is credited to Karin von Aroldingen, it's that same labored "Apollo" which Nureyev used to dance. Fiona Chadwick gave the liveliest performance, as Calliope, and two nights later she was a credible Cinderella in Ashton's ballet. Cope in the role of the Prince did not look lost, but he didn't look found, either. Without Ashton to rescue him, he has to rely on the rest of the company as a standard, and the Ashton tradition is no more honored today, now that Ashton is dead, than it was in the last years of his life. And with it, I'm afraid, has gone the Royal's identity as a classical company.

A new ballet by David Bintley, "The Spirit of Fugue," was a fussy account of Bintley's preoccupations as a choreographer; least among them seemed to be reviving the dancers' awareness of the Ashton tradition. Bintley's mentor, in fact, appeared to be Balanchine. "The Spirit of Fugue" followed "Apollo" on the program and quoted extensively from that ballet and from "Agon." Both Bintley and his composer, Peter McGowan, refer to Bach in their program notes, and Bach, to be sure, was in Stravinsky's mind both when he composed "Apollo" and when he composed "Agon." Presumably, Bach was in Balanchine's mind, too. But the internal connections that exist between a Bach fugue and a Stravinsky ballet seem to have eluded Bintley, and to have been replaced by mechanical reminders of Balanchine's choreography. One can't blame young choreographers for trying to uncover the tracks of their predecessors. How it happens that a Morris finds the path of invention while a Bintley plods in circles, taking us past sights we've already seen, can never be explained in terms of methodology. It is not a matter of retracing or reconstituting a process. Nor is it a matter of obliterating the past and starting out afresh. But when the path is struck, it is always as if for the first time.

—ARLENE CROCE

Baldwin on Brubeck.

Improvisations flow with an electrifying pulse. From the epicenter of Dave Brubeck's soul, the mystery unravels... at times with the force of a thunderstorm, and then gently, like a butterfly in the sun. Brubeck. The very sound of his name is a punctuation in musical time. Baldwin is his choice of piano.

Life plays better
on a  Baldwin

IN SAN FRANCISCO

WINTER SPECIAL—DECEMBER/FEBRUARY
Just two blocks west of Union Square.

Complimentary continental breakfast. Home of the highly acclaimed Post St.
Bar & Cafe.
$72 to $90

THE ANDREWS HOTEL

624 Post St., San Francisco, CA 94109

Call for Brochure

(800) 227-4742 • (415) 563-6877

In California (800) 622-0557

Fabulous Wooden Jigsaw Puzzles

Breathtakingly beautiful, delightfully devious, filled with special shapes and surprises! Cut by hand, on commission, and personalized just for you. Exceptional gifts! $120 and up.

Send for free literature.

Lucretia's Pieces (802) 457-3877
RR #2, Box 848-W6, Woodstock, VT 05091

GALAPAGOS

You, 9 other adventurers and our licensed naturalist will sail by yacht to explore more islands than any other Galapagos expedition. 50 Trip dates. Machu Picchu Option.

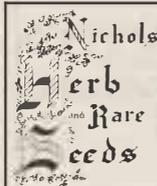

FREE BROCHURE

INCA FLOATS 415-420-1550
1311Y 63rd ST, EMERYVILLE, CA 94608

Florida's resort in town... and on the beach.

The Colony's gracious in-town setting is convenient to Florida's most sophisticated shopping. On the ocean, a private Cabaña Club with its own heated salt-water pool. At both locations you'll enjoy marvelous food and service. For over 50 years, the Boughton Family has been bringing their guests the best in Florida. Open Jan. 6—Apr. 2. See your travel agent or call 407-276-4123.

the Colony
BOX 970
DELRAY BEACH,
FLORIDA

Our 1989 catalog features the finest culinary and ornamental herb plants and seeds. Discover many new and unusual Oriental and European vegetable and flower varieties.

Complimentary Catalog. Write or call
NICHOLS GARDEN NURSERY
1194 NE Pacific, Albany, Oregon 97321
503-928-9280

First class family guest ranch in Wyoming mountains. New and renovated log cabins, homecooked family-style meals, personal horse, fish, swim, hot tub, chuckwagon BBQ, bonfire sing-a-long, evening programs, kids' programs. Featured in Good Housekeeping, Family Circle. "One Paradise that can claim the name..." Denver Post.

Write to Jim and Leah Anderson

PARADISE
GUEST RANCH

PO Box 790, Dept. NY
Buffalo, WY 82834
or phone: (307) 684-7876